ABOUT THE CONFERENCE: Environment is an inseparable part of human existence. Man along with millions of other species is existing on earth for thousands of years and continuing life on earth in sustainable manner. The need for development took a flip during industrial revolution and within a century it was transformed into greed that severely affected the sustainable nature of environment. So there arose a need for sustainable development which is harmonious with nature for environmental conservation. The science and technology have progressed rapidly in last fifty years and concept of green chemistry, environmental biotechnology, organic farming and wormiculture etc. has laid foundation for the conservation of environment through development in science and technology. The present conference is a sincere attempt in this direction with hope that thought provoking sessions of conference will bring out consensus for suggestions which will be sent to stake holders and policy makers for implementation to conserve our mother earth and pave a way for sustainable development.
